I knew at a very young age that I wanted to be a doctor. I knew that I wanted to care for people and develop special relationships over time. And I knew that I loved science, so I knew medicine was the way to accomplish that.

I think that physicians choose to practice at Kaiser Permanente...to practice high quality medicine...you're really focused on spending time with your patients and providing the highest quality medical care.

It goes back to medical school and recognizing that this is how I felt most myself when I was working with children, helping their parents understand the development and watching these families grow together. It really became sort of a calling for me.

I happened to be the son of immigrant parents and there weren't any other physicians. And I thought that was something that was important for me to represent for my family as being a Latino physician.

I have patients who seek care just because of my last name. And then we meet, and then we get to know each other, and I keep them here because they know that I'm going to understand when they use a word in Spanish that I'm going to understand the meaning behind it. They know that I'm going to understand their family structure.

Not only practicing as a provider, but I love Kaiser Permanente as a patient. I too have been through breast cancer twice, and Kaiser Permanente has treated me twice. And the integrative care model, the providers, the top-notch specialists, I couldn't ask for anything more.
